Julie McHale Who Began as Intern Now Directs City's Recreation Dept.

by Shane Doyle

In 1985, fresh out of college, Julie McHale landed a part-time internship with the city recreation department. Now, 26 years and six promotions later, she heads the department of recreation for all of Greenbelt.

McHale, 48, was appointed as Director of Recreation in February this year after a nationwide search to replace former director Hank Irving, who retired in 2010.

The new director says that Irving supported "family first," providing the flexibility she needed to raise a family, as long as she completed her work efficiently. McHale says maintaining this dynamic is her personal goal as director.

"Hank nurtured the department and created an environment that is like second family for all of us – this I plan to continue," she said.

According to Celeste May, a 13-year employee of the recreation department and mother of two young boys, McHale has so far been successful in that goal.

"Julie makes this place like family; it's great for somebody with kids," May said. "[Julie's] not just a coworker, she's a friend," May added.

McHale was born the eighth of 12 children in Fort Meade, Md., in July 1963. She jokes that her parents, retired Air Force Lt. Col. Ronald and Leona Jacobs, "had their own little military."

Military Brat

"Being a military brat, I traveled around the world, including the Middle East and most of Europe and perhaps that is where my love for adventure began," McHale said.

McHale was also strongly influenced by her mother, whom she says was her role model, and a person "who despite the challenges she faced, never really complained but just did it." McHale's mother died in July last year.

After graduating from Slippery Rock University with a bachelor's degree in health, physical education, recreation and dance, McHale became an intern with Greenbelt Recreation Department in summer 1985. That fall she was hired full-time as recreation coordinator.

One year later, McHale married Air Force Reserve Col. Lawrence McHale, with whom she recently celebrated her 25th anniversary. They have four children

2011-12 Budget Is Like Déjà Vu All Over Again for City Manager

by Thomas X. White

As required by the Greenbelt City Charter, City Manager Michael McLaughlin proposed a new City Budget at council's regular meeting on Monday, March 28. McLaughlin's presentation highlighted Greenbelt's budget priorities for the next fiscal year, which begins July 1, 2011, and ends June 30, 2012. All seven members of council were present.

McLaughlin's presentation reflected discussions he had with council during the January 19 pre-budget worksession. Apparently he had paid attention to councilmembers' concerns expressed on the need to increase revenues where possible and to try to avoid an increase in the city's property tax rate.

McLaughlin told the council, "Greenbelt is continuing to deal with a difficult economic climate." But council seemed pleased to hear that, despite similarities between the proposed FY12 budget and those adopted for Fiscal Years 2010 and 2011, "the impact of the difficult economy has been manageable for Greenbelt due to savings achieved during those years."

He cautioned, however, that the pressure will likely continue through Fiscal Year 2013 because the city's next triennial assessments for real property will not occur until 2012 and will not kick in until Fiscal Years 2014-16.

Highlights

The proposed budget is projecting city revenues of $25,723,800 – $458,000 or 1.8 percent more than for FY11. Proposed expenditures total $25,392,200 or 2.1 percent more than in FY11.

With the proposed budget forecasting a surplus of $331,600, McLaughlin highlighted four key budget priorities:

1. He would like council to support his proposal to refinance the city's existing debt. In the short term this will reduce interest payments, enabling the city to take on additional debt for capital needs. The strategy will cost the city more in the long term, however, as the maturity date of the existing debt is extended.

2. The increase in city revenues would be gained by raising inspection fees and by installing speed cameras in school neighborhoods. As projected at the January 19 worksession, tax abatements would be lower in 2011-12.

3. The proposed budget supports maintaining existing services and makes progress on the city's visioning goals. One vacant position in the Public Works Department is eliminated and, as in previous years, no layoffs or employee furloughs are planned. A total of 6.15 positions have been reduced since Fiscal Year 2009, mainly through attrition.

4. The manager's goal is to restore the Greenbelt fund balance to a recommended 10 percent level. The fund balance was drawn down in FY10 to weather the fiscal downturn; now he would like to add back over $300,000 per year in FY11 and 2012.

Some Good News

A glimmer of good news (for the city) is that the total assessed value for property is 1.5 percent higher, contributing $15.7 million in FY12. This will represent 61 percent of total city revenue for next year, up from 42 percent in Fiscal Year 2003.

Based on the manager's estimate for the assessed value of real property in Greenbelt, one cent in the city's tax rate would equal $209,500 in revenue. Other improving factors include an expected $2.16 million in income tax revenue, which marks a continuing recovery since FY09, and an increase of 8 percent in hotel/motel taxes. McLaughlin read in these figures a stable and slightly

Cryogenics Engineer, Local Volunteer: Susan Breon

by Marat Moore

"Cold" cropped up in conversations this week as snow capped the daffodils and chilled our spring dreams. But the term is relative – and to shatter preconceptions of what cold means, it's worth talking to Greenbelt's authority on extreme cold, Susan Breon.

As head of the Cryogenics and Fluids Branch at NASA Goddard, Breon, a nuclear engineer by training, oversees the agency's design and construction of super-cold systems that enable satellites to peer deeper into space or more closely at the earth below. What does super-cold mean to Breon? Very near absolute zero – the temperature when thermal energy vanishes, approximately -459 degrees Fahrenheit. (That's right, minus 459 degrees F.) At such low temperatures, satellite detectors become more sensitive and can pick up very faint images.

Breon has worked for NASA 25 years and now directs a staff of 25. She moved to Greenbelt in 1986 and put in one year at NASA with a contract company before joining the agency as a civil servant.

There are fascinating NASA applications for cryogenics –

New Metroland Agreement Allows for City Involvement

by Mary Willis Clarke

On Thursday, March 24 the Board of Directors of the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (WMATA) approved a revised Joint Development Agreement between WMATA and the Metroland development company for the Greenbelt Station project located adjacent to the Greenbelt Metro station. Although the News Review has been unable to obtain a copy of the approved agreement, the WMATA staff action memorandum indicates that the revised agreement grants the developer an additional three years to negotiate for a major Federal office tenant.

The memorandum indicates that the amendment is needed because the original agreement required the developer to obtain state funding for a new Beltway interchange and the local government (that is, Greenbelt) had required "high-end" retailers for the previously proposed mixed-use project. State funding for the interchange has not been obtained, however. WMATA staff now informs the WMATA board that local market competition would preclude development of a high-end retail center.

The three-year extension of the agreement from March 2011

Letters

Touched by Concern

I read some articles about Japanese earthquake on the latest issue of the Greenbelt News Review. Thank you very much for caring about us. And thank you very much for the project of 1,000 paper cranes. It moved me a great deal.

It is anticipated that the influence caused by the earthquake, tsunami and nuclear disaster will continue for a while. Our planned community, Senri, is at a long distance from Fukushima that is the hypocenter of the earthquake. So, thankfully, Senri is safe. My family, friends and colleagues and I are all safe.

We need to reconsider our convenient but isolated lifestyles from now on. This is a challenging subject for us. But I believe we can overcome the huge difficulty by the power of our ‘community’ and your cooperation.

The following is an essay about the earthquake that was written by Ryu Murakami who is a Japanese author. He is one of my favorite and reliable authors. In this essay he wrote that “The great earthquake and tsunami have robbed us of many lives and resources. But we who were so intoxicated with our own prosperity have once again planted the seed of hope. So I choose to believe.” http://www.nytimes.com/2011/03/17/opinion/17Murakami.html?_r=1

I agree with his opinion. I believe.

I appreciate your kindness and encouragement.

Construction Status on GMS Rebuild

In a recent weekly report on Capital Improvement Projects, county School Superintendent William Hite reported that the percentage of construction at Greenbelt Middle School is now at 10.5 percent complete. The figure was 4.6 percent on January 17 as reported in the January 27 News Review.

Foundation masonry wall installation continues in the kitchen, cafeteria and tech education areas. Grouting operation for masonry foundation wall has been started, utility pipe installation continues and electrical conduit installation is in progress in the gym area. Excavation, reinforcement steel installation and concrete placement for foundation footings have started and foundation masonry wall installation goes forward in the area of the two-story classrooms.

Warren Tweedy, acting principal of the school, reported that the project is on track, with completion expected in Fall 2012.

Corrections

In the photo last week on page 13 of Laurel Hill librarians and neighbors who presented at the Bridging the Spectrum research symposium at Catholic University in February, we incorrectly identified them as NASA employees. Actually Michael Chesnes is employed by LAC Group (not NASA), Eileen Boswell by the Community Transportation Association of America and Marianne Giltrud by Catholic University.

A typographical error in the Police Department 2010 Statistics article resulted in the wrong year being shown for murders in 2010. There were two murders in 2010.

In the front page article “New Soccer Club Granted Recognition Groups Status” in the March 24 issue, David Whiteman was incorrectly identified as assistant soccer commissioner, a position he once held. Also, three concerns attributed to him as being made at the city council meeting were actually reported as his concerns in a February 22 recreation staff memorandum concerning a November 15, 2010, meeting he had with recreation staff. These concerns were the size of soccer fields used by younger teams in the county leagues; that the county Boys and Girls Clubs league permits more experienced teams to play against beginner or less-skilled teams; and the amount of the registration fees.

Arts Festival Includes Two Legion Members

Two members of Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 will appear on Saturday, April 9 at High Point High School in Beltsville at a regional visual and performing arts festival for those who are or have been under medical care in the Veterans Administration Health Care System. Vocalist Wayne Miller and artist/comedienne April Goodwin will appear in the show and Goodwin will also be displaying her first place acrylic painting “Praying for Daddy.” The Beltsville event is an opportunity for this area’s veterans to display their talents to a local audience. In addition to solo acts and duets the stage show will include a 30-member chorus from the Maryland Center for Veterans Education and Training, which specialized in rehabilitation and training of homeless veterans.

An offshoot of the National Veterans Creative Arts Festival that is held annually, competition for spots in the national event begin in local VA medical centers with veterans who compete in creative writing, vocal and instrumental music, dance, comedy, drama and more than 40 categories of visual arts. Local winners progress to regional competition and from there to national level judging. First place national winners are invited to participate in the national festival scheduled in October this year in Fayetteville, Ark.

The festival was created to showcase the creative abilities of wounded veterans and to highlight the value of recreational therapy in their recovery. One veteran in the art show at the Washington VAMC said, “When I’m concentrating on my artwork, I don’t notice the pain.”

There is an admission fee (see ad on page 6). All proceeds will be donated to support this year’s national festival.

– Stephanie, 22; Kristina, 20; and twins Kevin and Patrick, 16.

City Manager Michael McLaughlin, who led the four-member panel interviewing McHale and other applicants for the director position, said McHale’s accomplishments during her many years of service for the city were a large part of why she was chosen.

“Julie has a philosophy of something for everyone,” McLaughlin said. “She’s just a very energetic person who loves what she does,” he added.

Two Initiatives

As assistant director of recreation programs, McHale started two initiatives in 2007 to help combat obesity: Get Active Greenbelt and Be Happy Be Healthy.

Get Active Greenbelt encourages citizens to participate in activities hosted by the department, such as the Gobble Wobble, a Thanksgiving Day race/fun run around Buddy Attick Park. Unique are the biannual play days where adults are encouraged to be kids again with activities like a moonbounce and an oversized tricycle ride.

McHale started the program after serving on a 2006 committee of the Maryland Recreation and Parks Association that looked at the Center for Disease Control’s obesity statistics and then surveyed all state recreation departments and the kinds of programs they offered.

“I was just alarmed at the number of people who were obese and the health risks that later in life it’s associated with,” McHale said. “We found that parks and recreation were certainly an avenue available in most communities.”

McHale credits county Councilmember Ingrid Turner with some of the program’s success. Turner secured three years’ worth of $4,000 grants for the recreation department, all of which McHale says goes to initiatives of Get Active Greenbelt.

In spring 2008, McHale introduced Be Happy Be Healthy, which encourages city employees to engage in physical activities. McHale serves as head of the Be Happy Be Healthy committee, comprised of representatives from each of the city’s departments.

Committee members tell McHale what sorts of activities their respective department is interested in and what times best suit the employees. McHale then makes the arrangements. Employees are able to get in some exercise during their lunch break or after work with activities like volleyball and line dancing. City employees also get 50 percent off for any city recreation class.

Employee Feedback

Public Information and Communications Coordinator Beverly Palau, who serves on the Be Happy Be Healthy committee, says she is happy with McHale’s leadership and success of the program.

“Julie likes to stay involved and is always willing to try new stuff . . . she’s always bringing new activities,” Palau said.

McHale feels that in light of recent budget cuts to schools affecting physical education and afterschool sports, recreation departments have an opportunity to step up and fill the gap.

“[After budget cuts], the state, the government and the parents were looking at the recreation department and we need to be more aware that as a department and as a city, we are here and we can make a difference.”

McHale says one of her favorite aspects of working for Greenbelt is the “layout of the land.”

“Whenever speaking to others about Greenbelt, I talk about how the offices, ball fields, tennis courts, pool, parks, centers, trails, grocery store, movie theater, etc. are all so close – like our own little campus. I really feel that people who live, work and play in Greenbelt, choose it for its uniqueness,” McHale said.

Healthy Maryland

McHale is also a member of the group Coalition for a Healthy Maryland on behalf of the city. This is “a collaboration of Maryland businesses, health clubs, insurers, nonprofit associations and individuals determined to improve the health of our state,” according to the coalition’s website.

Through this group the city received an invitation to attend Healthy Maryland Day, which was held in Annapolis in February. McHale and the Be Happy Be Healthy committee attended the event to raise awareness about the city’s obesity initiatives.

Currently McHale is preparing activities for the city’s 75th anniversary, which is next year; the 50th anniversary of the Youth Center, which is this fall; and the 20th anniversary of the Aquatic and Fitness Center, also this fall.

When she isn’t busy trying to keep the city healthy, McHale enjoys traveling, music, movies and “physical activities of all kinds” – a fitting hobby and a decent summary of her new domain as director.

Countering the somewhat good news are continuing signs of economic distress. Income from business/corporate property, at $1.15 million, is down nearly one-third from 2008 when it totaled $1.6 million. Likewise, the Admission & Amusement tax revenue has plummeted from $650,000 a decade ago to an expected $165,000 for the coming fiscal year.

In order to bolster revenues, the city manager proposes to raise residential inspection fees by $10 to $110/year, which will raise $46,000. Business inspections will also increase from a base of $125 to up to $285, raising $84,000.

For city residents, McLaughlin proposes an increase in Waste Collection of $4 per quarter with annual bills totaling $268. He also expects $200,000 in revenue to be realized by installation of one or more speed cameras, with a budget-minded caveat: the level of revenue tends to decrease with increasing compliance with speed limits on roads where cameras are put in use. McLaughlin noted experience of nearby cities such as College Park and Riverdale Park.

Other Revenue

In the “Other Revenue” category, the news is tentative. The biggest hit inflicted on the city and its residents is the continued reduction of the local governments’ share of Highway User Revenue (HUR).

Greenbelt’s share of HUR based on auto registrations and street mileage within the city, totaled $556,635 in FY09 but about 95 percent of that is now used to balance the state budget. Greenbelt’s expected share for FY12 is a meager $24,000 but city staff have indicated there is a possibility the General Assembly may restore some of those funds. If that effort succeeds Greenbelt’s share would be approximately $100,000.

On the expenditure side, McLaughlin projects savings in the FY12 budget of $685,000. He estimates that since FY09, over $1 million has been saved/cut/reduced from city budgets.

His proposed cuts this year include saved interest of $400,000 if council agrees to refinancing the city’s existing debt; $50,000 by eliminating one Public Works position; the purchase of five new police cars rather than eight to save $70,000 and programs to lower the city’s electricity costs, projected to save $100,000. Other proposed changes include an increase in the contribution rate by city employees in the city’s health insurance program from an 85/15 percentage share to an 80/20 share, saving $60,000, and a reduction in city uniform costs, saving $5,000.

Expenditures in the category of Workers Compensation Insurance for employees injured on the job will continue their unprecedented increase. Council had been warned about this increase at the January worksession. McLaughlin anticipates in his proposed budget that the premium for city employees will nearly double from $597,300 this year to $1,155,900 for FY12.

The proposed FY12 budget also calls for a 2 percent Cost of Living Adjustment (COLA) for all city employees.

Refinancing Debt

McLaughlin continued to make a case for refinancing the city’s outstanding debt. He cited the unexpected need to cover nearly $1 million for cost overruns of the completed Public Works facility. He noted other needs as well, such as the Old Greenbelt Theatre renovation, dredging and other projects at Greenbelt Lake and possibly needed repairs for the Aquatic Center roof.

He recommended that council consider placing a bond referendum on the November 2011 ballot to address the city’s capital needs and to take advantage of lower interest rates for long-term financing of selected projects.

Following the slide presentation, council members had no specific questions but lots of general comments. Most members were either pleased with the proposed budget or relieved that it was manageable despite the still crippled economy.

Mayor Judith Davis said that “she expected doom and gloom but it was actually better than she expected.” Councilmember Edward Putens’ take was, “let’s pass the budget tonight” because he felt the manager had done such a good job.

Councilmember Leta Mach said she thought the manager “had pulled a rabbit from a hat.” She felt the proposed budget was a really good proposal for the council to review.

Councilmember Konrad Herling started with, “I’m impressed!” but went on to say he is still concerned that the city is not yet on firm ground and not sure of what the future may hold.

Citing McLaughlin’s statistic that revenue from real property tax has increased from 42 percent of total revenues to 61 percent, Herling wants council to explore other ways to increase revenues. “We need to address and find answers for the pockets of vacant business property in the city,” he noted.

This reaction was echoed by Mayor Pro Tem Emmett Jordan. While congratulating McLaughlin for his proposed budget and for folding in links to the city’s mission and vision statements, Jordan argued for more proactive conversations with the city’s stakeholders and to get their help in looking at “tools” that might help city finances and give a boost to local businesses.

With the manager’s proposed budget now available, council has scheduled at least nine worksessions to review and evaluate details in the document and to make any changes they deem worthy. Let the Games Begin!

Aid for Japan Sought by Md. School Dept.

The Maryland State Department of Education is asking Maryland schools and school systems to help the people of Japan following the devastating earthquake and subsequent tsunami that damaged much of the Tōhoku region two weeks ago. They are partnering with the American Red Cross Central Maryland Chapter, which is helping support Japanese Red Cross employees providing direct assistance and medical care to the affected communities.

Named the Maryland Kids Care Campaign, Operation Japan, the fundraising effort begins on Friday, April 1 and will run through May 13. Maryland schools are asked to collect pennies and more to help aid victims.

In announcing the campaign, State Superintendent Nancy Grasmick said, "Our children are caring and compassionate and they are interested in the world around them. The Japanese people have experienced an unprecedented natural disaster and this campaign will provide students an opportunity to get involved and learn in a tangible, important way."

The last similar fundraising project was for Hurricane Katrina victims six years ago.

which is the study of low temperatures, how to produce them and how materials behave at those temperatures Consider Breon’s three current projects, as she describes them – “looking at x-rays coming from very energetic sources such as black holes and colliding galaxies; working with the James Webb Space Telescope, which will search for the earliest galaxies, even earlier than those found by Hubble; and looking at hot volcanoes and cool bodies of water on earth’s surface.”

But engineering is only one of Breon’s interests. Another is evident in her living room, where a harp stands in the middle of the floor and a baby grand piano takes up the far end of the room. And then there’s Kathryn, her adopted daughter who was born in China and Clyde, a “Cavvy” (Cavalier King Charles spaniel), a long name for the small and energetic dog!

Before this interview I had not met Susan but was aware of her musical talent from attending Greenbelt Community Church, where she sings in the choir, plays piano and occasionally the organ and leads the children’s choir. But I had no idea that this slender woman with the long strawberry-blond hair had traveled such an unusual and elevated professional path.

That path began in the small (population 350) town of Port Clinton, Pa., – “Reading is the closest real town,” she says. Her father encouraged her in her love of math, challenging her and her two siblings to add long columns of numbers. He ran knitting machines in a factory that made t-shirt cloth. “I think my dad would have been a scientist if he’d gone to college,” Breon said. She and her brother discovered his old chemistry set in the attic and it became their newest toy.

Susan’s other love was music; she began piano lessons at six years old and later learned clarinet, oboe and alto clarinet. Her mother drove her to countless band rehearsals and arranged for a music teacher to drive to their tiny town to give lessons to several families in the summer. “My mom has been a role model for persevering, even when things are hard,” she said.

By the time she graduated from high school, she was torn between studying music and engineering.

“I realized that I could be an amateur musician but not an amateur engineer, so I decided to do engineering as a profession,” she said. As an undergraduate at Penn State, she studied nuclear engineering; a professor urged her to consider graduate school.

Fusion Reactors

“At the time, fusion reactors were big in the field, and you need to use cryogenics to cool the superconductors. He recommended the University of Wisconsin-Madison, so I went there for my master’s and PhD in nuclear engineering with a concentration in cryogenics.

“By the time I finished my graduate degree, fusion reactors weren’t going anywhere and there weren’t too many places where cryogenics could be used,” she recalled. “My degree could be used to build machines – in particular, reactors to create energy – or in weapons research. I wasn’t interested in weapons.”

But NASA did use cryogenics – and she found that Goddard also offered her a chance to use her music, playing piano for fall musicals and spring shows at Goddard’s Music and Drama (MAD) Club for nearly 10 years. She also played piano and organ at local churches and served on the Labor Day Committee until it conflicted with her MAD productions. In Greenbelt, it’s all too easy to get overextended with community activities.

Adoption

Then, in 1999, Breon decided to pursue another dream – to adopt a baby. After working with Catholic Charities and international agencies, she traveled to China to meet her 16-month-old adoptive daughter, Kathryn, who is now 12.

In the years since, Breon has reduced her international travel for NASA, which had taken her to Japan, England, Switzerland and beyond, to spend time at home with Kathryn. She’s also been extremely active in the community, serving on the city’s Advisory Committee for Education and on various boards at Greenbelt Community Church, where she currently is church moderator and substitute organist and choir director. “There is so much activity at the church that it’s hard to keep up with it!” she says, laughing.

After more than two decades at NASA, Breon still finds few women at meetings and conferences of engineers. “For most women who have been working in this area for 15 to 25 years, it wasn’t uncommon always to be the only woman at a meeting. And now, women still are less than five percent of people in cryogenics.”

Japanese Disaster

We discussed the current nuclear disaster in Japan, which she’s very familiar with, having worked with Japanese engineers on satellite projects and made five trips to that country. “I’m devastated,” she said. “They’re all fission reactors. I look at this and see that the world’s thirst for power comes at a cost. Whether it’s a reactor accident, an oil spill in the Gulf or coal that burns underground, as it did in the town of Centralia, near where I grew up.”

And what does she think of renewables? “I see them as niche power supplies, because we would need huge solar and wind farms to produce the energy we use. I think we need to look at all the options. There is no perfect way to produce the energy that we need.”

One only wishes that cryogenics could be used to cool down the hot reactor core that is threatening Japan. And if anyone could tackle such a project, it would be Susan Breon.

What To Do When a Permanent Tooth Is Knocked Out

Gently pick up the tooth by the chewing surface being careful to not touch the root of the tooth. If dirty, gently rinse the tooth in water or milk. Do not use soap and do not scrub the tooth or wrap it in a tissue. Try to reposition the tooth in its socket immediately - do not use excessive force. The sooner the tooth is replaced the greater the likelihood it will survive. If you cannot get the tooth back into its socket, keep it moist either by carrying the tooth in cool milk or in your mouth – do not swallow the tooth!

See your dentist as soon as possible and ideally within 30 minutes.

You may also apply a cold compress or even a popsicle to the mouth and gums to decrease pain and bleeding.

to March 2014 will allow the proposed developer, Metroland, to participate in competition for a major Federal tenant. (In locating major Federal tenants, the General Services Administration, acting as the government landlord, invites potential developers to submit proposals, narrows the selection based on proposals submitted and negotiates a final lease or purchase agreement.) A further extension of time can be provided for the Joint Development Agreement if the Greenbelt Station site is selected to participate in a second round of competition for a federal tenant. If the Greenbelt site is eliminated in the first round of such a competition, the Joint Development Agreement would end. Of particular interest to Greenbelt, the WMATA staff report describes the amended agreement as providing for local government involvement in the planning process, including review of site plans. Greenbelt has long sought to be allowed more involvement in planning for this key site.

Council Meets with GATE, Praises Admirable Work

by Carol Griffith

On March 23 the City Council held a worksession with Greenbelt Access Television, Inc. (GATE). Representing council were Mayor Pro Tem Emmett Jordan and Councilmembers Silke Pope, Rodney Roberts and Konrad Herling. City Manager Michael McLaughlin also attended. GATE had five members including Tom White and Bob Zugby there to help with the presentation and answer questions.

The first order of business was a report on GATE’s budget given by Tom White. White reported that income has been steady for the past three years, even though the city’s contribution to GATE has been decreased. There have been fewer donations and grants and necessary repairs to a camera were an unexpected expense this year. Monies budgeted for new equipment, including new computers for animation programming, would probably be spent this fiscal year, White reported.

Membership numbers have also been steady, White said, noting that GATE’s annual meeting was to be held on March 27 and may result in new members. Roberts asked how many of the 40 to 50 members were active and White responded that many were active in GATE because of the opportunities for television production.

Pope asked about the long-standing issue of the lack of a banner or label for GATE on the cable channels reserved for local access. After some discussion, Jordan stated that he would pursue the issue with Comcast.

The next report to council was that of the executive director, presented on paper as the director was unable to attend due to illness. The report listed GATE’s many accomplishments this year, which included supporting GHI, TRU-G, GILA and the Green Man Festival and sponsoring the Utopia Film Festival.

Satellite Studio

Of interest to council was the item stating that GATE was interested in the possibility of setting up a satellite studio in the old Greenbelt Middle School building. Roberts asked if GATE would consider moving from its Community Center studios; Zugby reported that moving would be “difficult.” Herling observed that an advantage of the proposal is a greater connection to Greenbelt West.

Jordan asked about GATE’s outreach to the community. White reported that GATE had taken an ad in the News Review which advertised to organizations the opportunity to create public service announcements.

Animation instructor George Kochell reported to council on the GAVA/GATE animation programs. His students consist of home-schooled students, students from a program for at-risk children and regular GAVA/GATE animation classes. Currently the students are working on a project for Greenbelt’s 75th anniversary and Kochell applied for and won a Jim Cassells award for the project. He stated the need for more space so he can create a more controllable classroom situation.

Zugby provided a summary of the reports for council. Jordan concluded the worksession by complimenting GATE for its “admirable work.”

Artful Afternoon Features African Art and Dance

The next Artful Afternoon on Sunday, April 3 from 1 to 4 p.m., at the Community Center will focus on the arts of Africa and will include mudcloth painting and an African dance performance by Lesole’s Dance Project.

From 1 to 3 p.m. everyone is invited to try mudcloth painting and learn about textiles of the Ivory Coast and Mali with Artist-in-residence Karen Arrington, a clay artist. Mudcloth is traditionally woven by men, then designed and painted by women. The cloth is first set in a fixative solution made of tea. Mineral-rich mud used to make mudcloth is mixed with water and usually set aside for about a year before being used to paint. The artist uses twigs or metal instruments to paint the mud onto the prepared cloth. Mudcloth colors and designs are full of meaning.

At 3 p.m., Lesole’s Dance Project will perform Zulu, gumboot and urban street dances of South Africa. Participation will be invited from audience volunteers ready to move! The Lesole Dance Project has performed across the country and locally at Dance Africa, DC-Dance Place, the University of Maryland, Kennedy Center’s Millennium Stage and at Wolf Trap. In August 2009 the group launched its First Annual International Edu-dance Program, working with local primary schools in the townships of
